CASA GRANDE MINES.

The Golden West and the Lela Mining Companies. What they are Doing. Two Mills on the Ground.

The Vekol Camp—A Wonderful Mine—Over Two Miles of Tunnel Work—Other Mines.

At what is known as the Monarch camp, where is located the Old Monarch mine, thirty-five miles southwest of the town of Casa Grande, much evidence of mining activity is to be seen. The Monarch mine was recently purchased by the Lela Mining company, composed of Kansas City capitalists, with Mr. J. A. Conlee as general manager and superintendent.

Here also are located the properties of the Golden West Mining company, composed entirely of business men of St. Louis, with Mr. Chris. Loos, general manager and superintendent.

THE GOLDEN WEST PROPERTIES

Consist of the Golden West, Gold Dust, Climax, Oliver B. and Hanna claims. These mines are located all adjoining and while most of the development work has been done on the Golden West mine, still enough has been done on all of them to prove the existence of well defined veins containing all of them. The formation is principally lime, some porphyry and slate. The ledge runs from north to south, varying a few points in many places. The mineral appears to be traced over the claims, showing a well defined ledge.

On the Golden West mine a working tunnel 120 feet has been run into the claim. Besides this another tunnel of 100 feet has been opened which shows ore all the way. The shaft is down 175 feet and 400 feet of drifting and cross-cutting has been done. There are also other shafts ranging from 20 to 50 feet in depth making in all 775 feet of development work on this property. The shaft is sunk under and along the ledge and shows a smooth wall, indicating a fissure vein. The rock taken out of the shaft is in fairly good condition and is the admiration of the passengers on the train every evening.

THE ROBBERY.

Further Particulars Concerning the Robbery of Paymaster Wham—Four of the Escort Dead.

The news received on Saturday night by the marshal's office in this city about the bold robbery of Paymaster Wham on the road from Fort Grant to Fort Thomas, was the subject of general conversation on the streets yesterday.

In the forenoon absolutely nothing was known further than that the robbery had been committed, $25,000 taken, and eight of the escort wounded.

In the evening, however, a dispatch was received from Major Wham stating that the trail of the robbers was bloody and evidently some of them had been killed. The dispatch also stated that four of the wounded soldiers were dead and that the robbers were going in the direction of San Valero, which would be on the route to the south.

The report that the fight lasted thirty minutes was not generally believed, but no one doubted that it seemed so to those who participated.

The point where the robbery occurred is described as a box canyon where there is just room for a wagon to pass.

Mr. James O. O'Neil, who was with the escort, told the following story: "The robbers had rolled a boulder into the road and when the wagons reached the point, they were ordered to stop. The first shot struck the wagon behind the ambulance, after which the firing was directed at the escort wagon."

THE ROBBERY.

Further Particulars Concerning the Robbery of Paymaster Wham—Four of the Escort Dead.

The news received on Saturday night by the marshal's office in this city about the bold robbery of Paymaster Wham on the road from Fort Grant to Fort Thomas, was the subject of general conversation on the streets yesterday.

In the forenoon absolutely nothing was known further than that the robbery had been committed, $25,000 taken, and eight of the escort wounded.

In the evening, however, a dispatch was received from Major Wham stating that the trail of the robbers was bloody and evidently some of them had been killed. The dispatch also stated that four of the wounded soldiers were dead and that the robbers were going in the direction of San Valero, which would be on the route to the south.

The report that the fight lasted thirty minutes was not generally believed, but no one doubted that it seemed so to those who participated.

The point where the robbery occurred is described as a box canyon where there is just room for a wagon to pass.

Mr. James O. O'Neil, who was with the escort, told the following story: "The robbers had rolled a boulder into the road and when the wagons reached the point, they were ordered to stop. The first shot struck the wagon behind the ambulance, after which the firing was directed at the escort wagon."
